STRATEGY FOR HANDLING CONGRESSIONAL REQUESTS FOR STUDIES/INFORMATION

- Requests for data/studies/etc. from congressional committees continue to proliferate. Among those currently outstanding are:

STAT

- We have reached a point where we need to develop a consistent policy for handling these requests, else we may set piece-meal precedents that will constrain our future options and ultimately "give away the store"

- Options available for responding to any given request for documentation include:

  -- Forwarding the requested document

  -- Providing the document on loan for a specified period of time

  -- Making the document available for review in our facilities only

  -- Briefing the committee on the major conclusions of the document

  -- Denying the request

- We should review what our policy has been over the past year or so on all congressional requests, characterize the nature of each request, and record how it was handled (and with what success) within the categories outlined above. Based on this review we can determine what implicit precedents have already been set, how successful our past policies have been, and whether comprehensive guidelines make sense.

- If the proposed review indicates that guidelines are feasible and would be useful, they might take the following form:

Requested Document Contains:	Response
Internal management conclusions (e.g. audit reports)	Deny request
Sensitive sources and methods, including foreign liaison relationships	Brief the committee
Analysis of foreign situations	Provide document etc.
